Day/Time: Thursday, February 7, 2019, 3 - 5 PM

Title: Autism & the Neurodiversity Movement

Presenters:
Kelly Searsmith, PhD (kellydm@illinois.edu)
Laura S. DeThorne, PhD, CCC-SLP (laura.dethorne@wmich.edu)

Overview of Learning Outcomes

Attending to this presentation will allow participants

1. Contrast the medical versus social model of disability.
2. Identify and discuss key themes associated with the Neurodiversity Paradigm.
3. Suggest at least 3 ways that the Neurodiversity paradigm could shape your clinical practice.

Notes

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________
____________________________________________________________________________________
REFERENCES

Actually Autistic blog search engine http://soulriser.net/search/actually-autistic/

